CONTRARY to the principle usually put hito practice, it is evident that in dealing with Chinese officials it is a mistake to take "No" for an answer. With ordinary people it is useless to re-open any question after so definite a reply has been given, and a man who does se justly runs the risk of receiving somewhat short answers for his pains. But with the Chinese, a preliminary "No" amounts to very little more than a slight expression. dissent, and receiving a definite refusal at the outset is no reason for giving up importunity with respect to any given matter. The Chinese in fact seem to go upon something of the same principle as we understand is prevalent in Spain, where a man | - Pie French Assembly has met. The first request is simply meant to be refused as a matter of course, and it is not eliquette to accout until it has been pressed at least three or four times. The Chinese seem to look upon the requests of Foreign Ministers for commercial and other concessions in much the same way and give an answer in the negative as a matter of course, in order to start things on a fair basis. At least such would seem to be the case if we are to judge from what has taken place in regard to almost every request which has been made. Everything asked Cox, Thos. Parker, Jas. Greig, and C. S. If seems, according to the Northern papers, that another illustration has been given of the advantages of keeping up requests with the Chinese; and the possibility that, like the unjust Judge, they will yield at last to our importunity. There is, it is stated, at last some chance that steps will be taken for the dredging of the Woosung Bar. The N. C. meantime they were sent back again. LONG VACATION.

If Cambridge our-hoast superiority over Oxuse that University makes of its Long Vacation. It may probably be assumed as very near the truth that a third of the entire number of undergraduates at Cambridge "stay up " for a great part of the months between June and October. Tutors are retained for their instruction, collège rooms are placed at their disposal, and thus the grost industrious class of students often find "the Long" the most advantageous part of the whole year for preparing for the examinations. At Oxford, on the contrary, the whole University—undergraduates, tutors, professors—in short, every soul except a few domesticated old fellows, make off for the country, and, with the few doubtful exceptions. afforded by so-called reading parties, devote for residence. The worst part of the whole business is, that the undergraduates are not to blame. They cannot help themselves; for it current among heads of houses, vice-presidents and deans, that to stay up in the Long Vacation is an illicit, immoral, and wholly intolerable proceeding. Consequently in the great majority of colleges the rooms are doomed for four entire months to enforced vacancy. The excuse usually illeged for this idleness is the fact that the two proctors are absent, and that the moral iscipling of the young men cannot be preperly looked after. The proctors are, no doubt, valu- qualified acceptance of the statistical proof able servants, and no one will grudge them afforded as to the superiority of total abstinence their trump over the Alps, or their dolce far amid the pestilential vapours of an Ashantee niente at the seaside. > CURIOUS EXPERIMENT ON VINES. The following singular statement has been received from M. Delormo by the French Academy of Sciences :- On the 13th of June, 1872, the Marquis de l'Espine, president of the Agricultural Society of the Vaucluce, and several other eminent viticulturists of the Herault, the Gard, &c., proceeded, at M. Delorme's request, to a vineyard at Faramar, in the Lower Camargue, and situated in the centre of pasture land of some extent, distant from any other vineyard, and surrounded with a high enclosure of dry reeds. It contained 28 vines, 12 of which disseminated round the hedge and 16 forming a group on the southern extremity of the ground. All these plants, brought thither in Murch, 1869, being then two years old, appeared quite bealthy and vigorous; the soil consisted of compact clay mixed with a very small proportion of fine sand. Six vines of the group being selected, and their roots found perfectly free from phylloxeras, they were infected by M. Delorme with six radicles awarming with the parasite, in the presence of the said witnesses, and covered up with earth again. These patients were carefully watched from that moment. The dry summer of 1872, caused some appearance of weakness in two of the infected plants and one of the others. On the 3rd of July, 1873, a general survey of the place was made in the presence of the same witnesses. The outward look of all the vines was excellent; those that had suffered in 1872 were, however, somewhat weaker. Their roots being carefully examined, were found quite healthy, and it was with the greatest difficulty a few phytloxeras were discovered on the two infected ones. The other four also had their roots laid bare, and proved all but free uninfected vines had no insects at all. The vineyard continued to prosper, yielding magnificent grapes, until the 27th of August last, when a new survey was proceeded to. Of the six infected plants only three remained, the other three having been pulled up for the sake of their roots, which were to be preserved. The three remaining ones were in beautiful condition and luxuriant; their roots had but very few phylloxeros. As for the uninfected vines, not one was found infested with the parasite. This curious experiment, which is calculated to stagger many in their preconceived opinions, is to be continued "to the bitter end," so as render it quite conclusive.—Galignani.

Extracts. THE SONG OF THE FLAIL. by J. T. TROWBRIDGE. In the autumn, when the hollows-Are all filled with flying leaves," And the colonies of swallows Quit the quaintly studeoed eaves_ And a silver mantle distore Over all the misty vale, Sits the little wife and listens To the benting of the flail To the pounding of the fluit-🕪 her cradle site and listens : To the flapping of the flail. The bright summer days are over-And her eye no longer sees The red bloom upon the clover :-

The deep green upon the trees; Hushed the congs of fuch and robin. With the whistle of the quail: But she hears the mellow throbbing Of the thunder of the fluil-The low thunder of the flail-Through the amber air the throbbing

And reverberating flail. In the barn the stout young threshop Beating out his golden treasure From the ripe and matling sheaves: Oh I was ever knight in armour-Warrior all in shining mail-Half so handsome as her furmer.

As he plies the flying fill-As he wields the flashing flail-The bare-throated, brown young firmer, As he swings the sounding flail? All the hopes that saw the sowing, And the sweet desire of gain, All the joy that watched the growing? And the yellowing of the grain,

And the love that went to woo here And the faith that shall not fail-All are spenking softly to her, In the pulses of the flail-Of the palpitating fluil-Past and Future whisper to her In the music of the flail.

of a later day, both in capacity and in conwas in keeping a benco, a cupboard, and a few wooden platters and utensils for cooking, food was of the coarsest, and he bitterly experienced the hardships of his condition at a time when scarcity and famine not unfrequently occurred. In describing the lot of the widow, Chaucer says:—

Three kine, teke a sheep that highte malle.

Full scoty was hire boure, teke hire halle.

In which she etc many a elender male. Of poinant sauco, no knew she never'a dele. No deintee morsel passed throughs hire throte; Hire diete was accordant to hire cote."

Of the dwellings of the upper classes, four hundred years since, or about the middle of the fifteenth century, the prominent and distinctive feature was the dining hall. It was the chief room in the mansion, and on it the other buildings seemed mainly to depend; the offices and chambers being grouped

In general terms it may be said that at this period, and for some considerable time subsequently, domestic comfort was unknown, as judged by imodern standards Even in castles and manor houses the furniture of the dining-table was scapty. Its chief ornament was the huge sattcellar, which marked the place of the poorer guests and of the servents, who had to sit who the salt." On royal and baronial tables the goblets, plates, and dishes were of silver gilt or enamel; but in ordinary houses wooden bowls and trenchers were used. Two valuations of the movable property in the borough of Colchester, made in the years 1296 and 1301, preparatory to leaving subsidies, for carrying on the war, against France, enable be tell per cent. (10 %) only. us to decide, with some degree of precision, the measure of domestic ease and comfort enjoyed by petty tradesmen and artificers at that period. Of household furniture the quantity possessed by each family was inconsiderable. A bed was valued at from three shillings to six shillings; in most houses a brass pot, from one shilling to three shillings value, is to be met with; and this seems-to have been almost the only culinary utensil then used. Two or three of the inferior tradesmen possessed silver cups from one shilling to two shillings in value; silver spoons were also in use, one of which was ·valued at tenpence; a cobbler's stock-intrade was estimated at seven shillings; a butcher's stock of sult meat of thirty-dight shillings: a tanner's stock at seven shillings to eleven shillings. Even after allowing for the difference in the value of money, which was then, in round numbers, worth fifteen times as much as in the present day, the figures contained in these valuations represent but small sums. Almost every family was provided with a small store of barley or cate. usually about a quarter or two of each ; rve appears to have been very little used, and wheat scarcely at all. It is probable that corn was generally ground into flour at home, as | will allow a Brokerage of THIRTY. bandmills are mentioned; a pair cost twelve THREE and ONE-THIRD PER CENT. pence. Soap, and candles with cotton wicks, (331 %) on Local Risks only. are noticed. Some families possessed a cow or two, but more kept hoge; two or three were the usual number of the stock. From the small provision of fuel in the town, it may be inferred that very few houses had chimneys. A few tradesmen had a small stock of faggots, probably for the use of their workshops; sea coal occurs more than blacksmiths. Of the handicraft trades, particularly that of a carpenter, no high idea will be formed either from the number or the value of the tools; his whole stock was valued at one shilling, and consisted of a broad are TROM and after this date, and until further valued at five pence; another at three pence; an adze, two pence; a square, (20%) upon current local rates of Premis, will one penny, a "navegor," or spokeshave, one penny. A blacksmith's tools were valued at from two shillings to five shillings; one cobbler's stock at seven shillings and five pence; another's at ten shillings and six pence; a tanner's stock, including clothe, &c., at nine pounds, seventeen shillings and ten pence. Compared with the others, this is a great sum; but it must be recollected that the trade was one of the first in ancient times. Leather was not only used for various militury purpose, but formed a considerable part of the common dress of the people, before the introduction of the woollen manufacture and during its injancy. We are intdebted for these curious items to the minute attention of the tax gatherers. who seem to have taken notice of everything that could be comprised under the article of movables. It proves to us that notwithstanding the exaggerated ideas which many intelligent writers have formed, respecting the wealth of our cities in ancient times. one of the most flourishing in Edward the First's reign was, in point of capital stock, in arts, and in industry, far inferior to many modern village .- Capital and Labour:

The grand impression which the city made on me on my first entrance was hardly maintained by a closer acquaintance with it. The enghantment was dissolved when I came to abound.
